

Making Soils Visible: Being with Muck and Memory

Dr Saskia Cornes (Duke University)

Tuesday 22 October
5:00-7:00pm
Third Floor Seminar Room
TORCH, Woodstock Rd.

Wine and snacks will be served.

Saskia Cornes is an Assistant Professor of Practice at the John Hope Franklin Humanities Institute at Duke University, and Program Director of Duke Campus Farm. Her teaching and research work together to rethink our relationship to food, and to the land and people that grow it. A Renaissance scholar by training, Cornes holds a PhD in English and Comparative Literature from Columbia University, where she focused on the culture of agriculture in 17th century England.

This is a hybrid event, co-hosted with the University of Toronto. Dr. Cornes will speak from Toronto, followed by an in-person response from Oxford DPhil student Barbara Stiubiener Abrahao from the School of Anthropology & Museum Ethnography.

Those in Oxford are warmly encouraged to participate together and in person at TORCH. If you wish to attend online, please visit our website for details.

NORTHROP
FRYE CENTRE

 Jackman Humanities Institute
UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

 School of the Environment
UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO